[Rates of uterine rupture in second trimester for forceps and vacuum extractor]. A multicenter retrospective study was performed to assess whether the use of forceps and vacuum extractor may be associated with a risk of uterine rupture and to find an optimal method of classification of the grade of uterine rupture. The study involved 8 maternity units in France. We reviewed all cases of uterine rupture occurring during three years (January 1999 to December 2001). Patients were classified according to the following clinical and histological criteria of uterine rupture: tear of the cervical or cervical isthmic zone, tear of the decidua parietalis, and/or vaginal and/or uterine lacerations involving 10% or more of the uterine wall. A hundred forty-five cases of uterine rupture were identified. Among them, the following rates of uterine rupture were found: 36% (n=53) for first trimester, 13.5% (n=20) for second trimester and 7.3% (n=11) for third trimester (chi2=12.52; P<0.05). The activity of caspases-9 and -3 was decreased in hepatocytes isolated from the obese Zucker rats. Excessive hepatic glucose production 82157476af
